

Phi Beta Sigma, among others, help clean up area's Malcolm X birth site

The fenced in lot stands nearly empty. No buildings. No animals. No people. Just broken beer bottles, a rusted aluminum bed frame, rotting cardboard boxes and an abandoned pink, plastic doll stroller. However, this isn't just any vacant lot. This is the site where civil rights icon Malcolm X was born, and it has become a neighborhood dumping ground.

Early Saturday morning, members of Phi Beta Sigma, their youth auxiliary group, Sigma Beta and their sister organization Zeta Phi Beta came together with members of the Malcolm X Memorial Foundation and community volunteers to clean the site.

The fraternity was scheduled to do the clean up on April 16, but rain storms delayed the project by a week, according to Jeffery Epting, Phi Beta Sigma social action chair. Personal motivation and Saturday's pleasant, yet breezy, weather brought the group out to North Omaha. The site, at the intersection of 34th and Evans Streets, is just south of bustling Ames Avenue, tucked away behind rows of houses and has a view of the freeway.

"Malcolm X was one of Nebraska's greatest natives; one of our greatest civil rights leaders. His birth site, his memorial has turned into a dumping ground. We're just out here trying to make a difference in our community," Epting said. You know, build the morale of Omaha; doing our small part."

While he sifted through a pile of bottle caps and fetid paper, Epting explained why the birth site had deteriorated.

"Before it was the Malcolm X Memorial Birth site, it was a place where people just came and dumped trash. Two years ago they (The Malcolm X Memorial Foundation) put fence up when people had (already) gotten into the habit of dumping here, even though it is the birth site officially," he said.

Members of his fraternity, which encompasses three campuses, joined Epting. UNO, Creighton University and Bellevue University were all represented in the project.

Creighton freshman Jesse Hill was doing his part in his first community service project with the fraternity.

"(I'm here) to help clean up the birth site of Malcolm X. This is one of my first actual community service projects (with the fraternity). I thought that it would be good to come out and try to represent for the fraternity," Hill said.

Despite his recent membership to the fraternity, Hill is no stranger to community service, having earned the status of Eagle Scout. Because of this, he knows the positive effects that these sorts of activities can have.

"It's good, first for the community. (As an Eagle Scout) we were taught to leave a place better than we found it. And, this is horrible," he said motioning to the foul-smelling pile of trash at his feet.

Student senate finishes 2004-2005 with heavy debate

CRYSTAL R. REID

Soaked student senators braved the heavy rain last Thursday to attend the final Student Senate meeting of the semester.

The student senators heavily debated a resolution asking for the allocation of $3,000 of student government funds, which are built on student fees, for scholarships for a leadership training camp, Campus Camp Wellstone.

The camp is a training program for students interested in gaining skills in leadership and political action. The registration fee for each student is $20, which covers all materials, a dinner and a lunch. The money requested from student government funds would provide scholarships to students that wish to attend but are unable to pay the registration fee.

The debate began when it became clear that money allocated would cover more than the remainder of the cost of the camp.

According to Jeff Leanna, camp co-director, the remainder of the cost of the camp is $2,700. The resolution asked for $3,000.

"The whole $3,000 isn't necessarily needed," said President/Regent Elizabeth Kraemer.

Executive Treasurer Jordan Baker was skeptical as well.

"I don't know how well this company operates," he said.

Ultimately, the student senators decided that the request for money was too late for support.

"There is absolutely too much to be done

Criminal Justice professor calls Afghan Studies a failure in report

CRYSTAL R. REID

Samuel Walker has accused the Center for Afghanistan Studies and its director of being a failure to the university.

Walker is the named chair and coordinator for the Department of Criminal Justice.

In a report released in March, Walker indicated three areas of failure for the center that it:

- produced no original scholarship on Afghanistan
- has not built a program of courses on Afghanistan at UNO
- harmed national security by failing in its responsibility to advance the state of knowledge about this critical part of the world.

While the report noted that the center's director, Tom Gouttierre, has received considerable recognition from media, Walker also stated that he felt the center's failure is "due to the lack of academic orientation on the part of Director Gouttierre and the lack of vision on the part of succession of UNO leaders."

The report was released to several entities on and outside of campus, including the Board of Regents and the State Department.

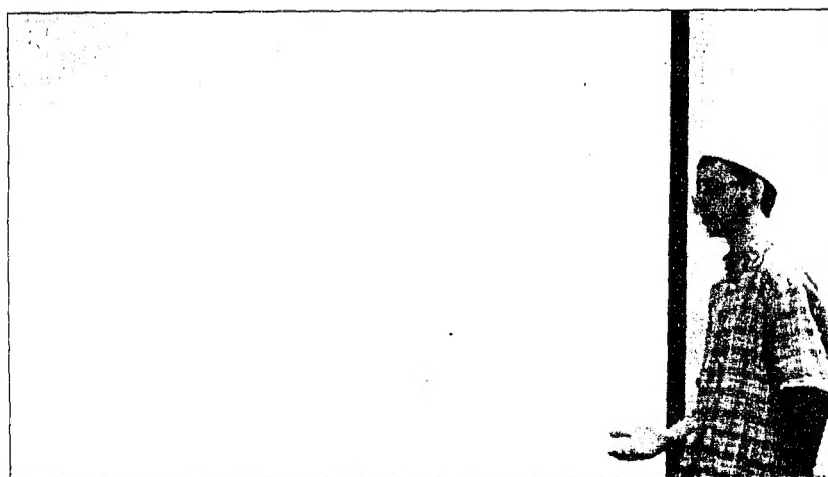

Gouttierre prepared a statement regarding the report and has it available to anyone who is concerned about items noted in Walker's report.

"The major thing, of course, is I think that he doesn't understand that the Center for Afghanistan Studies is primarily a program unit," Gouttierre said.

In his statement, Gouttierre said that

Troy Ezell, the chapter's undergraduate president, said that this clean up was important for him on a personal level. He was motivated by a personal desire to come to the site.

"Personally, just the fact that I've been in Omaha for three years and have never been to the Malcolm X birth site (brought me here). I'd just drive by here and never really knew the significance before I became a Sigma," he said.

Epting feels that this event can do a lot to further the community, but that it will take a great deal of work.

"It says that we have a lot of work to do to get the word out about this place. Not just that it's here, but actually start building it up, to help with the Malcolm X Memorial Foundation," Epting said.

Epting has high hopes for the neglected plot of land. He says that there are many programs in the works for the memorial that honor both the memory of Malcolm X and community in which it will be situated.

"If we get people more involved with building up the site, not just keeping it clean and having a little marker here, but to actually have the facilities. The community help center, library, technology center that will be free to the community, all those things that we're trying to get people excited about," he said. "People cannot use it as a dumpsite anymore."

the there had never been an intention to create an undergraduate major or master's degree in Afghanistan Studies, citing the lack of an interested student base.

Walker indicated that the student base for such a program could be from military and federal agencies seeking to expand their expertise in this area.

Gouttierre's statement also cited the instructional materials it has produced, like the Dari-English Dictionary and two Dari Language textbooks. Maps of Afghanistan produced by Gouttierre have been published in National Geographic and Time magazine.

"There have been numerous publications that have been generated by people who have come here," Gouttierre said.

Walker's report also said that "the failure of the UNO CAS (Center of Afghanistan Studies) to join the AIAS (American Institute of Afghanistan Studies) is an embarrassment and a virtual guilty plea."

"After 9/11, there was a whole host of people that discovered Afghanistan. We were asked by all of them to help them and to make contributions," Gouttierre said. "Realistically, these are organizations that are competitive and asking us for our contributions."

Gouttierre said he is waiting to see if these younger institutions would succeed or fail.

"We try to be as helpful as we can without undercutting our own," Gouttierre said.

Ultimately, Walker's report concludes that the only way to save the center is for Gouttierre to be removed as director and for UNO to make a substantial investment to build a credible academic program.

The Faculty Senate has assigned a committee to further research the accusations of Walker's report and the defenses of the center in Gouttierre's statement.

Web site earns money to save rabbit from consumption

ALEX MAY

SENIOR STAFF WRITER

It seems people will do anything for money these days, with more and more creative people coming up with quick cash ideas. Remember the guy that sold ad space on his forehead? How about the lady who recently sold the monster under her child's bed on eBay? Well now there is another to add to the list.

The masterminds behind www.SaveToby.com, two east coast college kids who prefer to remain anonymous, have already collected more than $24,000. How? By threatening the life of a pet rabbit—saved a few months ago from an attack by another animal—according to the Web site. While the owners of the site seem to love the rabbit, as they spent several months nursing Toby back to health, they threaten that they will eat Toby if $50,000 is not raised by June 30.

There is a special recipe section on the Web site where several of Toby's "options" are listed in detail. For example, the recipe for "Moroccan Hare Tagine" includes "Toby" in its ingredients, as well as in the instructions. "After quartering brown Toby at medium-high heat. Remove Toby from the pan..."

On the opening page to this section there is a picture of Toby sniffing around in a pan with a caption: Toby says "Let me out of this pot!"

There is also a gallery section with too many cute pictures to count, including one of the little rabbit in a tiny T-shirt emblazoned with the Web site's logo, an outline of a rabbit with the words "Save Toby" in it, laying on top of his owner in a similar shirt. There are a variety of pictures to tug at viewer's heartstrings, photos such as Toby playing at the park and Toby with his ears perked up.

In the update section there is everything from hate mail and the site owners' responses, to a sweet letter by a little girl offering for Toby to come live with her and her rabbit, Snowy. There is also a link to the "NBC Nightly News with Brian Williams" article that covered the story and got interviews with the owners of the site.

According to the NBC article, the site is no joke.

"No, not at all. As a matter of fact, it's very serious. If we don't get $50,000, we are going to eat the rabbit," stated the sites' co-owners in the article.

As can be imagined, animal rights activists are enraged, and have been bombarding Pay Pal with angry e-mails to the point where the online payment company shut down the "donations" link on the Save Toby Web site. Save Toby owners claim they have a book deal in which they plan to talk about "why animal rights activists are crazy," according to www.savetoby.com.

Donations can be made directly, or can be made through the purchase of "Save Toby" merchandise, such as mugs, cookbooks and sweatshirts, offered in the online store. So will Toby actually be eaten? As the Web site states, "Only YOU have the power to Save Toby."

UNO Spirit Campaign drawing to a finale

SARAH LEGG

FEATURES EDITOR

Movie tickets, T-shirts, flash drives—these are just a few examples of the many prizes the UNO Spirit Committee has given away throughout the year, and on Friday, it will be giving away cash.

This year was the first year for the UNO Spirit Campaign, a joint effort between students, alumni and faculty to increase campus spirit.

"We made it our goal to increase morale on campus," said Gayle Roberts, chair of UNO Spirit Committee.

During both the fall and spring semesters, the committee has made its presence known at various events across campus. At each event committee participants have free tickets for students to enter into two raffles—one that day and one at the end of the semester. The committee has been at athletic events, on-campus concerts, plays and Student Programming Organization events, among others. It also participated in what Roberts calls "venue events," which took place at Peter Kiewit Institute, the library, food court and Arts and Sciences building. Venue events are when the spirit committee just sets up tables at each of the buildings for students to submit tickets.

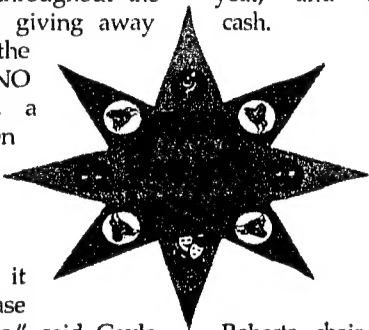

So far, the campaign has seen a good reaction from faculty, alumni and students.

"We've gotten close to 4,400 tickets," said Roberts. "I would love to see about 1,000 more."

The end of the year drawing will take place on Friday around 1 to 1:30 p.m. Starting at noon, the UNO Spirit Committee will be in the Arts and Sciences hall, Milo Bail Student Center, Peter Kiewit Institute and the University Library to give out the free tickets for the $500 grand prize, $250 second prize, $100 third prize and $50 fourth and fifth prizes. Chancellor Belck will draw for all the prizes in the pep bowl that day. Other prizes will also be drawn for, including T-shirts and cups.

According to Roberts, the campaign has met its main goal to increase campus morale.

"It has been a successful campaign this year," she said.

Out of Nothing
Embrace

From what I've read about these guys, they're supposedly pretty big in the UK. This album debuted at number one in September of last year. Now that it is making its way here, I'm curious how the American palette would take this — especially mine.

I actually gave this CD an unbiased listen and tried to pick off some parts of the songs, and the band in general, that really stood out. I'll be blunt here: I'm not a fan of Coldplay. Never was, never will be. How does this relate to Embrace? Easily, because they sound almost exactly like Coldplay and Chris Martin of Coldplay wrote its single, "Gravity."

The piano, slow tempo drums, strumming of the guitars, and the powerful, note-holding voice is what this band is all about. It seems to be an all-too-familiar formula. Then again, it is kind of strange how this style of music is the epitome of UK bands. This album does have its high points (such as "Near Life") and can be very atmospheric at times. If you're ever in the mood to relax, or just close your eyes and daze to another world, then this CD can be the catalyst. Sadly, I'm rarely in that mood and when I am, I prefer trance.

For those of you who like Coldplay, or the full feel of UK bands, then this CD will probably rock your world. Please remember that this review is coming from someone who doesn't like Coldplay or that style of music, so for all you know, I'm just full of it.

Hearts on Parade
American Hi Fi

I actually listened to this band's previous album, The Art of Losing, and there is an embarrassing difference. The Art of Losing had balls, it had a soul and it wasn't drowned out by an upbeat pop tempo. (Wow, let's rip off music from the 70s and 80s, try to make it our own, and have it dubbed as an original style!) Please, spare me from original bands — becoming overly hip.

Hearts on Parade is American Hi-Fi meets power-pop meets rock, gone berserk. Just by looking at these guys, they just scream rock stars. Too bad that image won't save this album.

This entire CD is filled with generic breakdowns, laughable lyrics and kind of gives me the feeling of, "We're cool, this album is a summer anthem, we're not sell-outs, listen to us."

Ten cool points for having almost every song be about a girl. People with a halfway decent musical taste would rather joke about this album than actually listen to it. You know, I might like this album if I was a 16-year-old high school girl ... and since I'm not (thankfully). I'd rather use this album as a coaster or a Frisbee. It's really unfortunate that these guys had to sink to this level. I wonder which band will be the next to be devoured by power-pop-rock.

not like post-hardcore, or metalcore, or any other genre with "core" tagged after it. The only band that I can really compare No Warning to are The Hope Conspiracy, but with a small hint of Spineshank in the choruses, and a little softer. Yes, it's a bit more mainstream and has more of a catchy feel to it, but it still has the energy and drive of the genre.

The album offers ten tracks in less than 30 minutes of runtime, which I actually like in a way. The band cuts to the chase and gives the listener 28 minutes of pure distorted guitars and great music. Now this music isn't for everyone, and some people will complain about the unrelenting aggressiveness.

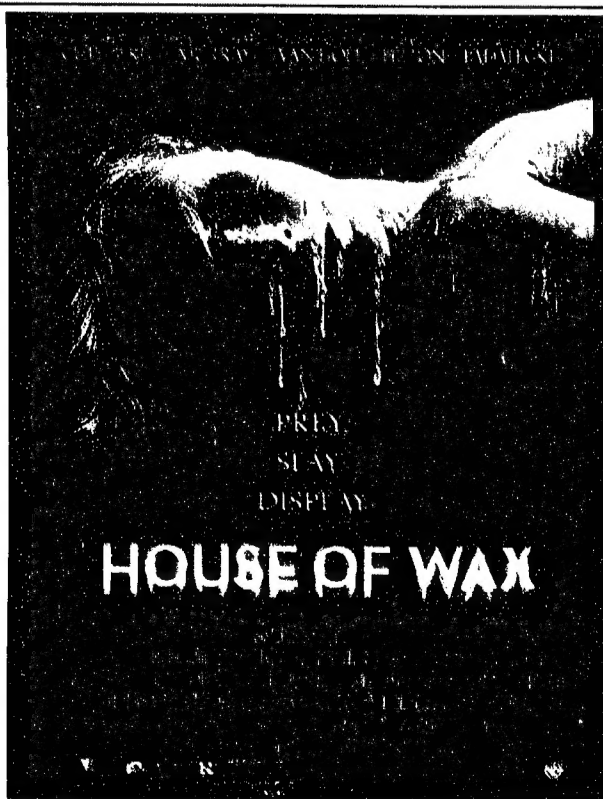

But, in my eyes, I generally dislike the upbeat and mellow bands of the time. Even worse, I can't stand the modern standard of hard rock and hardcore for that matter. As of now, those genres are almost drowned out by an image and just bad music. These guys are regular guys that just want to rock out without the image. For that, I salute them. To wrap this up, No Warning is a solid band, but the album does contain some mainstream and generic segments. Overall, it's a good album, especially from a band on Warner Bros.

Suffer, Survive
No Warning

I thought I was in for strike three while popping in this third disc. Little did I know that No Warning was a hardcore band, and I freaking love hardcore. It's

Cumbee's movie commentary

Keeping you in-the-know on all things film

The final commentary: Looking ahead at this summer's movies

ANDREW CUMBEE
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

And so the end is near. This is my final commentary of the year. I'm actually crying as I'm writing this. Uhh ... not really ... like I care. All right, all right, you got me. I have mixed emotions. I really don't know what to think.

For those of you that read this religiously (I'm talking to you, mouth-breather-wearing-the-Camera-shirt), I want to say thank you for following me on my journey of self-exploration in my search for the truth about film. For those of you that read me every so often, you should have read more, 'cause of how awesome my commentaries were. And for those that are reading my prose for the first time: I hate you. Just kidding, thanks for the effort.

Ah ... now that I'm through with that teary-eyed farewell, let's go into the future. Summer is less than two weeks away, and you'll need to know which huge blockbusters to avoid, and which ones you need to get in line for right now. Next I'll tell you what's coming out and what I think about them based on nothing but advertising and the people involved. Let's get started.

May 6 - The first weekend of summer for the UNO student has two major film releases. The first is a remake of two classic horror films, House of Wax, and the second is Kingdom of Heaven from Ridley Scott. If you want to just see something fun, go to Wax, which actually looks pretty good and scary. If you want something a little more thought-provoking, something with a little war action, check out the Crusades flick.

May 13 - We have Monster-in-Law (a new film from J.Lo ... avoid it), Kicking & Screaming (a Will Ferrell movie for kids ... avoid it), Mindhunters (that thing with the FBI training and the killer ... maybe see), and Unleashed (the Jet Li and Luc Besson team-up film ... definitely check out if you are an action or kung fu film fan).

May 19 - Oh my god, finally, Star Wars comes to an end. Expect some crazy annoying fanboy love at the theaters this weekend.

May 27 - The Longest Yard remake with Adam Sandler and Madagascar, the kid's animated thingie. Word is, these both suck.

Holy Cumbee, Batman! Your faithful movie columnist wants you to go see Batman Begins in the theaters this summer, opening on June 17.

Warner Bros.

June 3 - Cinderella Man from Ron Howard and Russell Crowe and Lords of Dogtown, about the guys that started the skateboarding craze. Both of these should be worth your time.

June 10 - Today we have the Mr. and Mrs. Smith remake with Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie, the film version of The Honeymooners with Cedric the Entertainer, and Robert Rodriguez's The Adventures of Shark Boy and Lava Girl in 3-D. I just don't know. This week is up to you if you go out ... nothing looks great, nothing looks bad.

June 17 - Batman Begins. Go see it.

June 24 - Herbie: Fully Loaded. Don't see it.

We also get Bewitched the movie and Land of the Dead, the fourth movie in the "Night of the Living Dead" original series. This is even directed by George Romero, who did the first three.

July 1 - Spielberg's remake of War of the Worlds with Tom Cruise. Gotta see that.

July 8 - Fantastic Four. This is one of those movies that you go to because you have to see it and then you leave the theater wanting to kill yourself. You know you're going, but it's not going to be that enjoyable. Sorry.

July 15 - Tim Burton's remake of Charlie and the Chocolate Factory (look at all those remakes this summer). We also get a comedy called The Wedding Crashers with Vince Vaughn and Owen Wilson. Looks funny.

July 22 - Michael Bay's new one, The Island. This time it's the future. I actually don't hate Bay, this should be pretty cool. We also get the The Bad News Bears remake and The Devil's Rejects, Rob Zombie's horror/revenge film spin-off. Another you-pick-'em weekend.

July 29 - Stealth, the filmed version of the stupidest idea for an action movie ever

Hardballers split Wednesday, reach 30 wins with sweep Friday

NATHAN LEETE
SPORTS EDITOR

UNO hosted Southwest Minnesota State in a non-conference doubleheader on Wednesday at the Ballpark at Boys Town. The Mavericks won the first game 11-1, but dropped the late show 9-4.

Christopher Machian

UNO catcher Marc Centofante tries to field an errant throw in the top of the third as Augustana's Gary Walz scores the fourth run of the game for Augustana.

Josh Lundin pitched a complete game allowing only four hits and one run in game one against SW Minnesota. Lundin struck out eight batters in the 11-1 victory. Brian Frew, Min Sung and Josh Shirk had two RBIs each for the Mavericks.

UNO allowed the Mustangs to take advantage of five errors in the second game. Nathan Koppi led the Mustangs by going 3-for-4 at the plate with three RBIs.

The team returned to North Central Conference action Saturday when it traveled to Augustana, sweeping the Vikings with wins of 6-2 and 4-3. In that doubleheader UNO won its 30th game of the season with the sweep. The Mavericks trailed 1-0 in the opener until the third frame. Frew started things off for the Mavs with a two-run bomb. Jeff Hansen extended the lead to three with a two-RBI single later in the inning. UNO brought runs across in the fourth and sixth frames for a 6-2 win.

In the fourth inning of the second game, the Mavericks brought 16 batters to the plate and scored 11 runs on just six hits. Chad Leon and Troy Cloyd drove in three runs each in the 14-3 victory.

The second half of the four-game series was held Sunday. Check Friday's issue of The Gateway for results.

Mavericks take five titles at Doane Relays

THOMAS LAMAY
STAFF WRITER

The UNO track team traveled to Crete, Neb. last weekend for the Doane Relays and brought five titles home at the meet.

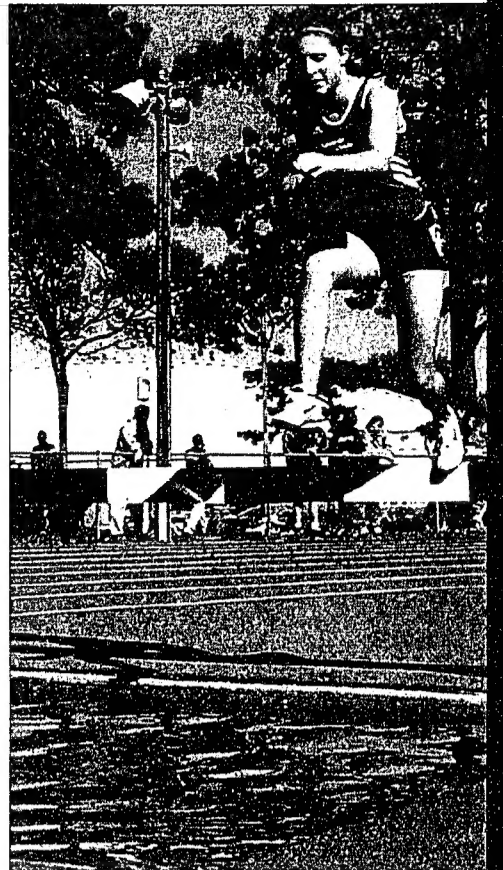

Anastasia Kyvelidou added another record to her collection, setting a Doane Relay and a Lauritsen Track record, en route to winning the 100-meter dash. Her time in preliminaries of 14.14 seconds broke the record of 14.26 set by Kim Colon of Fort Hays State. Kyvelidou later went on to win the 200-meter dash in 25.83.

Instead of running the 200-meter dash with Kyvelidou, Debbie Akerly captured a title in the long jump and anchored the winning 400-meter relay team. Akerly also took second in the 100-meter hurdles. With a steady cross wind and cool temperatures, Akerly leaped 18 feet 8 inches to win the long jump. Competing in three events and nursing a nagging foot injury, coaches decided to hold her out of the triple jump competition.

The 1,600-meter relay team also had a winning finish at Doane, even without teammate Magda Orzylowski, who was recuperating from an injury. Head Coach Tim Hendricks is looking to shave a few seconds off their time at the Drake Relays next week, to solidify their chances for nationals.

Molly Miller took second in the 3,000-meter steeplechase. Miller's time of 11:17.22 will provisionally qualify her for the national meet. Her time is currently ranked in the top 20 in the nation however, Miller will need to continue to climb in the rankings to make the trip to Abilene, Texas. Miller also ran a leg in the winning 3,200-meter relay on Friday.

Several other Mavericks gave strong efforts at the meet. Allison Gorman and Kaylen Harris placed second and third in the 10,000-meter run. Jennifer Victor took third in the 800-meter run, and Becky Hughes placed third in the 200-meter dash.

UNO will send Foluso Makinde and the 400 and 1,600-meter medley relay teams to compete at the Drake Relays April 28-30 in Des Moines, Iowa. Kyvelidou, Akerly, Byers and Julie Gass will leave May 1 for the NCC Heptathlon in Grand Forks, N.D.

comes out. For a head trip this weekend, check out Terry Gilliam's The Brothers Grimm, a dark grown-up fairy tale starring Matt Damon.

Aug. 5 - The Pink Panther remake comes out. Oh god ... this looks painful, but I'm going because of how great the original still is. We also get a real comedy from Mike Judge called 3001. It's about a man that gets sent to that year and realizes that he's easily the smartest man alive. Also don't forget the movie version of The Dukes of Hazzard, sure to piss off fans of the original.

Aug. 12 - Finally, a sequel to Dence Bigelow comes out. For your horror fix, go to the voodoo flick The Skeleton Key. We also get a film called Four Brothers. This is John Singleton's new one starring Mark Wahlberg, Tyrese, and Andre 3000. I have no idea what it is.

Aug. 19 - The only film of interest this day is called The 40 Year-Old Virgin. It's about a 40 year-old virgin. This is from some of comedy's brightest new stars. Steve Carrell plays the title character.

Well, that takes us into school right there. What a weird bunch of movies. Everything on there is a remake of a TV show or a movie. Where's the trying? There's definitely some good stuff there to check out and it's all really diversified this year, which is new for summer.

Anyway, thanks for checking out my articles. I'll hopefully be back next year with something new and different (if The Gateway takes me back). Feel free to write letters to editor@gateway.unomaha.edu and let them know how much my column has rocked your face this year.

on this to vote on it now," said James Cards, senator for the College of Arts and Sciences.

In other business, the students discussed 'rock, paper, scissors' as the deciding factor in a tied senate vote.

The Rules Committee presented its final set of rules for senate elections. In the case of a tie, the committee decided on using the game 'rock, paper, scissors,' to decide the outcome of the election.

"They wanted to do something unique, different from other campuses," Alex Williams said. Williams is the Legislative/Public Relations officer.

Some debate ensued about the professionalism of 'rock, paper, scissors.'

"What if senators look at these rules and think 'are these a bunch of kids or are these college students who want to make a difference?'" said Melanie Schrieber, senator for the freshman class.

The rules passed as is, 'rock, paper, scissors' included.

The senate also passed a letter of statement supporting student housing and a resolution asking to have traffic lines re-painted in parking lots.

A resolution asking for action on bench placement in Durham Science Center failed.

Chief Administrative Officer Amber Lewis made her final speech to the senate after they presented her with a letter of statement commending her hard work and enthusiasm.

Despite her dripping wet suit and rain-soaked shoes, Lewis took the podium to address the senate one last time.

"It's been a great experience for me," Lewis said. "Thank you so much for the friendship you've provided me these two years. I see a lot of future leaders here."
